

Whānau say

Our tamaiti is having amazing growth spurts. We've had to pass on lots of clothes to others.

They're never short of questions – which we try to answer.

Their imagination is so active they sometimes get scared. We try to make sure they know what's happening around them – giving them simple explanations.

They're counting, and chanting the alphabet. It's rote learning at this stage, but it helps build their memory.

When we go visiting, they're taking more notice of where we're going and recognising places we've been before.

Remember whānau, vision and hearing checks are still important!
