

Pēpi says

I like to eat, sleep and kōrero. It's my daily routine.

When I'm comfortable and people respond to me, I'm learning to trust my world – tōku ao ātaahua!

As I get stronger and start to get some control over my body, I'll lift and turn my head to see what you're doing, and I'll follow your voice. I love voices and I recognise them.

I gaze a lot and like to study the faces of people in my new world. I can tell the differences between familiar faces.

I'm learning how to smile – or maybe I've got wind?

My whānau are helping me learn through simple mahi like kōrero, waiata and keeping me calm. It's all helping my brain to develop.