

Pēpi is using information from all their senses at once: reach, poke, mouth, grab, listen and look.

We know pēpi understands a lot more kupu than they can say. When we ask, “Kei hea tō ihu?”, pēpi points to their nose.

We share small chunky books with hard pages and brightly coloured pictures. Adding lots of sounds or making up stories helps to keep pēpi interested.

We know that their attention span can be quite short and that’s okay.

We love it when pēpi tries to interact with us and we always respond with excitement.

Pēpi has started to stand while holding onto things, sit without support, explore objects in a variety of different ways, and pick up, bang, drop, shake and throw things.

We notice and love to record all the new things pēpi is doing. Nana and the whānau love to hear all about these too.
